The stochastic gradient methods in a reproducing kernel Hilbert space have been proposed. In this seminar, we present the method within the conventional framework of LMS theories with a theoretical analysis of its convergence and regularization. The emphases are the inherent regularization nature of the LMS algorithm as a learning algorithm and the applicability of the LMS algorithm in a very high dimensional space as an adaptive signal processing tool.